In 1an effort to comprehensively renew the regulatory framework and adjust it to the multiple events and innovations that have taken place in the Colombian scenario over the last eighteen years, Banco de la República recently began working on a revision of all pertinent regulations. The idea was to start using the logic of a foreign exchange market with a floating exchange rate with agents that have many years of experience participating in it. Not only these agents but also the markets in general became more sophisticated during these years, and the country was able to consolidate significant achievements in terms of institutional solidity and development.
